- Federal Regulations require bus drivers to buckle up.
- Safety belts are proven to help drivers maintain control of the bus in an accident, minimizing the chance of injury or death to you, your passengers, and other motorists.
- Safety belts are necessary even at low speeds. In a frontal collision at 30 mph, an unbelted bus driver hits the windshield at that speed.
- Buckling up takes only about three seconds- and can make a difference for a lifetime.
